I have been taking note of the great people and their ages when they did the things we remember them for.

Jesus - he couldn't start earlier than he did, they say, because before his 30th birthday, a man in his society didn't sit in the council of men. But by the age of 33 he had finished rocking the whole world for ages to come.

Mandela was 28 around when he became politically active. And as he was being taken off to prison he left behind a wife and two daughters.

Winnie Mandela was 23 when she took over her husband's platform, to speak out for the New South Africa.

Napoleon Bonaparte -- became France's leader at the age of 29, and he went on to become and emperor.

Malcom X -- joined the Nation of Islam in his late twenties, and soon enough became one of the greatest black leaders out here. By 39 he'd finished making his history.

Bob Marley -- started singing at 17, died at 37 or 39 leaving behind a great pile of work precious to the black world and all.

Queen Victoria-- was it at 25-26 that she said, "behold I marry England"? And it's said that during her reign England was living a golden age.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr -- he was 26 when he led the Montgomery boycotts, and ever since became one of the great black leaders.

King Mwanga -- he was 24-26 when he ordered the martrys killed, as part of his struggle to stabilise the Baganda kingdom. By 36 he was dead.

The list goes on, and when you go through it, I understood why at three years old, our parents used to say, she/he's old enough to pay taxes. I for one have always felt challenged by these people. And could never say I was young, when they did what they did when they did it.
