Kkwo okuba kiri degrading and unappreciative. These people sacrifice themselves for their families, and they call them the "big broomers"! We could have a more loving term, something that shows we understand and appreciate. something like; the Western Union Rangers, the Mpagi Luwaga, Mmundu Mmenye, Mukwano Talemwa. Nga oli bwabuuza, bannange Sarah yalagawa? Yafuuka Mukwano Talemwa. Nga kitegeeza yagenda bweeru kkola asomese abaana.

Saava thanks for this. My reply to your post is in English to enable even those who may not speak Luganda to follow.

We at Connect Uganda have been fighting this. It is a very degrading term. It is not a term I would use to describe even the lowest of class that I know. It is a filthy term. So why use it on us?

I'm made to understand that this term was coined in the early eighties, where most people who left sweet motherland for opportunities elsewhere had first failed at home. And the only opportunities they ever found, though money generating, were literally akin to sweeping. Hence the term 'Nkuba Kyeeyo!'

From how this term sounds, it must have been coined by people in the Diaspora referring to themselves while in conversation with people back home. As I think more of the origins of this term, I tend to imagine a conversation like; 'Munnange ndyeno nkuba kyeeyo.'

Such a conversation could only have been from a person drawing sympathy on themselves mainly because of the nature of the jobs they did at the time and the conditions they worked under. The people home seem to simply have adopted it, and of late used it wrongly and sometimes spitefully.

This term is also wrongly popularised by my favourite singer of all time - the legend - Philly Bongoley Lutaaya. Philly, in his song 'Naalikwagadde' describes the sort of life he was going through at the time while living in Sweden; "Ekyeeyo kinfuukidde olukokobe, nkolentya maama" goes part of the lyrics.

I like to believe it was a loose term. Coined to reflect what these people were going through at the time while in the Diaspora.

Times have changed. They may not have changed very much, but they have. We now have qualified Ugandans leaving voluntarily to come and work in developed countries as Doctors, Nurses, IT gurus etc. Others have gained success in various fields since coming to these lands. We have supervisors in chain stores, hospitals etc.

I'm clear of the fact that we still have people doing the sort of work and under the sort of conditions that could have been the origins of the term.

In my opinion which I stand strongly by, the jobs we may be doing in these new lands are satisfying. They may not be motivating as such, but they pay the bills, educate the relatives, build us decent houses, and allow us a somewhat comfortable lifestyle with some level of savings.

It is from these grounds that we at Connect Uganda took the step early enough to see that the term 'Nkuba Kyeeyo' gets changed.

A few cynics always wanted to know what the new phrase could be, and how we would point people's vocabularies to the new phrase. My answer was always simple. Charity starts at Hoima. Sorry Home. If anyone is going to change this, it is us. And the timing couldn't be more right.

'Nkolera Bweru wa Uganda' was and is the candidate in my opinion. Queenie and I have fronted this term during the 'Family Sunday Shows' here on Connect Uganda in the hope that it will be adopted and eventually used to replace the filthy term 'Nkuba Kyeeyo.'

We can only work in unison. If we start to refer to ourselves as 'ba Nkolera Bweru wa Uganda' and correct every single soul that refers to us as 'Nkuba Kyeeyo' then the revolution can start.... and roll. I doubt anyone can stand in the way of a positive social change.

Your opinions are much appreciated.

My first job out here was working as a house-help, for an illetrate shrew.It felt like falling down from the top floor of the crested towers. I mean as far as social status is concerned. And it hurt so bad! So one day when tha woman was scolding me for some triviality, I started laughing hysterically. If someone reminded me then nti, "Okuba kyeeyo" it would have given me some ideas.

Well, if our host societies were to know that we call coming to them "striking or hitting the broom" couldn't they take it for violent intentions? Isn't that terrorising? I'm I going too far?

What word can replace this "KYEEYO" word without changing the meaning and is less degrading?

Mike tried it once when Mulaasi was on his live show...those were many words....any suggestions plz?

Re: The term 'kyeeyo' is degrading

Posted by Meli - 2007/07/22 06:31

We've got some suggestions up here. Naye waliwo nabakiyita "Ekipakasi", "Akabaasa", "Voluntary slavery"... need more?

But there is a good side to this name "Kyeeyo". It marks our history. Calling things by their name can be very helpful in understanding them. Because our hospitals need doctors and our doctors are out cleaning streets. Our nurses are tending to a single elderly in Europe or America, while big groups in hospitals are in need of him. Our Economists are cleaning buildings and the Lawyers picking fruits! Think about keeping the name until we solve the problem.

Meli (REAL CONNECTOR), that is the kind of attitude i have. But, when a word raises concern to a vast community we then consider eliminating it...or coming up with some word that meets the satification of the "members" in the caterogy questionable.

The "N" word became a big deal in the black communities in the USA until some communities have practically held burial functions for it..example TEXAS did just a few weeks ago..

I hope we can get a better version for our "KYEEYO" vocabulary before we get over board.

Because you've been showing contempt for our christian belief and because you have no reverence for God, I demand that you tell this parliament where you heard these evil things and why you had to bring them up here, if not for the sake of provoking believers and disturbing this meeting.

Kalibatanya ye gwe oli mu ddini ki ebwo jebatabyogelako? all in all, the expression was not meant to provoke anyone but rather to mean what it was intended to mean. As a matter fact, it is not that big of a deal, and I think we should go back to the main topic why we are here... that is "the term kyeeyo." thank you for your concern however, try again. But I think ndowoza mulimu abantu abamu nga bo bagala kutanula ntallo. Ekintu eokibulidwa nolaba ne nkozesa naye still osigala owalila kuba oyagala kutanula lutalo. hehe not this time.. try again. Kyeeyo money reduces poverty

Thursday, 11th October, 2007

E-mail article E-mail article Print article Print article

By Andrew Ssenyonga

and Suleiman Matovu

PRIVATE inflows from abroad, kyeeyo money, greatly reduce poverty across the nation, a Makerere University Business School (MUBS) official has said.

“Remittances raise per capita income and have reduced the poverty ratio in many developing countries,” acting principal James Akampumuza said at pre-CHOGM conference recently.

“The evidence is that kyeeyo money has reduced the share of poor people in their population by 11%.”

“For instance, people on kyeeyo send money for school fees, buy land, houses and other property, which improves earnings of the Government,” Akampumuza said.

“A 10% increase in the share of kyeeyo to the gross domestic product in Uganda would lead to a 1.6% decline in the number of people living in poverty.”

Official statistics show that Commonwealth countries' migrant remittances exceeded $167b (sh292,250b) in 2005.

Akampumuza added that the remittances are a significant source of external funding for developing Commonwealth countries.

Prof. Timothy Shaw of the University of India said on top of physical investments, kyeyo money could help finance education and health, which are key variables in promoting economic growth.

"The recipient households tend to spend more money on health care and sending children to good schools," he added.
