
one\'s own diary

Posted by Biikolwa - 2007/10/11 20:37

We've all got stories to tell. Some sad, some funny, some excruciatingly embarrassing, some just downright silly. Either way, they are our own life's journey and we each have unique ways of how we've dealt with certain situations in our lives. One thing I am saddened by is the effects of civil wars on our society's records and our diverse cultures within and around of Ug. Persons have lost photos of loved ones or history of accounts mainly due to this instability.

I like to live and hope that we all practice the habit of keeping our own personal diaries or journals - they make great reading for moments when we least expect them to and can carry forth a beautiful legacy to those we live behind when we next move off never to return.

I love reading, and the question of naming who is my favourite etc, is a difficult one because mostly the books I read are dictated by my state of mind.

=====

Re:one\'s own diary

Posted by Meli - 2007/10/12 14:13

A dream diary is another interesting thing to keep. And if everynow and then you remember to point out some related actual events, this can be a study of your subconscious, a great journey into the abyss of your own soul.

=====

Re:one\'s own diary

Posted by Biikolwa - 2007/11/06 23:22

Meli - I tried this once, but it spooked me out...

=====

Re:one\'s own diary

Posted by Meli - 2007/11/06 23:25

Hahahahahah....It's spooky all right!!!!

=====